The chancel was filled with tropical plants and first met him. It was at a London dinner party, many years ago, and I had no notion who he was At that time he had, I think, lately been apnointed President of his Court. I saw opposite me a fine face, clear-cut, with a power of exsing at the same time great strength and fect repose. The eyes were singularly steady. they neither sought nor evaded anybody. The hed was well shaped and capacious; the lines of the temples those which patient thinking and nuch study draw. Not perhaps handsome, he ad a serenity and firm sweetness which did as when he spoke, it was very quietly, but word told. He spoke as one having auwrity, and people listened. They do not always sten at the London dinner table. He made no dort to shine. The company included, perhaps, rather more than a due proportion of celebrities. some of whom were clearly actuated by a sense of duty to sustain, and even to emphasize, their own claims to distinction. Yet when they had done their best, the attention of the critical remained fixed on this quiet man with the grayblue eyes and full forehead, from whose compressed, firm, yet mobile lips proceeded these easy sentences of which almost every one had the precision of a geometrical statement. After a while, I found out that this was Sir James Hannen. I met him from time to time afterward. He was always the same. He had taken his line and kept Signs were not wanting that beneath this calm surface there were flery currents of passion. perhaps even of temper. They were not allowed to come to the surface. It was this mastery over himself which gave him such mastery over when Sir Charles Russell came, as he so often Special Commission. Few judges resist the imsetuosity of this great advocate. He is wont to be content with Sir James Hannen's way. Lord Hannen's share in the Behring Sen Arbi-

ration at Paris concerns us more nearly than the Parnell Commission, though we hardly seemed to think so at the time. The part he played there was less conspicuous, perhaps not ess decisive. He was against us, and he influenced the tribunal against us. Perhaps it will never be known how much he swayed his col-Our American arbitrators could tell -we can hardly quarrel with his memory for that-and he had a deep conviction that the principles of law for which England contended ere for the interest of both countries and of all countries. He was strenuous against the views of law which our leading counsel, Mr. Phelps, urged upon the tribunal. Like everybody else, he paid a hearty tribute to the juridical knowledge, to the sweep and strength of argument, to the learning and the extraordinary forensic power with which Mr. Phelps presented his case. But he was determined that the arbitrators should not adopt these views. He laored with his colleagues. Mr. Phelps, I think, knew who his chief antagonist was, and how resolute he was. The two opponents respected each other. Lord Hannen was inside and Mr. Phelps was outside, and Lord Hannen won. Take out the American arbitrators, especially Mr. Justice Harlan, and the English, especially Lord Hannen,-the Behring Sea "Arbitration would not remain a strong body. It had barning, integrity, diplomacy, and other good things, but it was very much at the mercy of to or three of its members. Lord Hannen's arrices were not very generously recognized, on is seturn, and the lack of public or official recwhiten is the more to be regretted, since they mato have cost him his life. Paris that sumnews reeking with influenza and typhoid. He seer shook off the illness he contracted, came to resign the Lordship of Appeal to which behad been appointed on retiring from the Divotce Court, and his career was over. His pagments, said his able successor, Sir Francis Jeune, have been landmarks in the law. No preser judge during the last two generations, said the Lord Chief Justice. Both were speaking from the Bench, and these judicial eulogies from his colleagues are certainly those which Lord Hannen himself would have valued most.

NOT THE VICTIM OF A MAN. From The Chicago Inter Ocean.

Senator Hill has pointed out the mistakes of the imbistration almost as clearly as could a Resolican. The only trouble with Senator Hill's exception is that he makes his party the victim of man, when the country knows that the party is responsible for the mistakes and as untrust-orthy as its leader.

DEMOCRACY DOOMED ANYWAY.

From The Minneapolis Tribune.

All that Mr. Hill says about the doom of the Democratic party is only too true. But the statement is true, whether the party inserts the income tax in its hybrid revenue measure or not. For that reason it is doubtful if Mr. Hill's bird carries are the income tax in the statement in the statement is true, whether the party. Their doom already sealed, they have nothing to fear the income tax.

AN ART COLLECTION SCATTERED.

St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, in Stuy-vesant Square, was filled to the doors yesterday with a gay concourse of people, assembled to witness the wedding of Miss Juliet Pierpont Morgan, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, and William Pierson Hamilton, a son of William Gaston Hamilton. Several thousand invitations were sent out for the ceremony, which was set for 3:39 o'clock. The disagreeable weather appeared to have little effect on the attendance or the display of bright spring costumes, especially by those bidden while roses. White flowers in great profusion were used to decorate the chancel rail, while on each pew along the middle aisle was fastened with a broad sash ribbon of white satin, a cluster of lilies, American Beauty rose and bright colored spring flowers. While the guests were arriving, W. H. Chester, the organist, played an excellent programme of music, including the "Coronation March," from "Le Prophete"; Jensen's "Bridal Song," a nuptial march and nuptial chorus by Guilmant, the gavotte from Thomas's "Mignon," a Moorish serenade, by Jonas, "The War March of the Priests," from "Athalie"; march and chorus from Tannhaüser, the march from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," the festival march from "Die Meistersinger," and the ballet music from Rubinstein's "Feramors."

It was just half-past 3 o'clock when the six ushers, Richard Tighe Wainwright, Frederic W. Jones, jr., Reginald Ronalds, E. De Peyster Livingston, A. Gordon Norrie and Albert Francke, entered the church from the vestibule, and to the music of a wedding march, written by Sebastian B. autumn, led the bridal procession. They were foland Miss Marie Hamilton, sisters of the bridegroom; Miss Morgan and Miss Annie Morgan, sisters of the bride; Miss Sturgis, cousin of the bride, and Miss Fanny Hoppin, of Providence. Then came the bride, leaning on the arm of her father, brocaded satin, made with high neck and long train, the skirt and corsage being trimmed with point lace. The veil of white tulle was effectively arranged or the head, and fell over the shoulders and well down on to the train of the skirt in deep folds. It wa held in place by a fleur-de-lis coronet of diamonds, a present from the bridegroom, About the neckband of her dress she wore a superb necklace of pearls, a present from her father, while on her of diamond flowers. She carried a bouquet of liller

At the foot of the chancel steps the bride was met have his own way with courts,-with the Bench by the bridegroom, who was attended by his brother, as with the jury. In this instance, he had to Laurens Hamilton, as best man. The bridesmaids were attractive costumes of white crepe. shoulder capes of violet-colored satin, and three made with capes of pale yellow satin. They were white Leghorn hats, the flared-up rims of which were faced with velvet, to match the color of the capes, and each trimmed with a profusion of purple lilacs. The marriage ceremony was performed by Bishop Henry Benjamin Whipple, of Minnesota, as sisted by the rector of St. George's, the Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford. As the bridal party left the church, Mr. Chester played the Mendelssohn "Wedding March.

A large reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan followed the wedding. There was an elaborate floral decoration by Thorley in each of the rooms and in the hallway. The bride, assisted by her mother, who wore a gown of silver-gray brocade, embeliished with point lace, received the guests in the large drawing-room. During the hours of the reception there was music by the was served by Sherry.

Among the guests at the church and house were Mr. and Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, jr., William Gaston Hamilton, Miss Charlotte Pell, Henry Chauncey, jr.; Mr. and Mrs. W. W. That was because she had had such a terribly shormy voyage not because of any dislike to the country.

Miss Tilley said she was nervous about her first appearance. She will have to get over that and do something really remarkable as an entertainer, if she is to fulfil all the expectations that have been raised by the announcements that have been made about her. She appears in London every summer, at four music halls on each evening, and she will go back to one of these quadruple engagements when she leaves this city. SHE TOOK THE INITIATIVE IN BREAKING HER ENGAGEMENT WITH HOWARD GOULD.

The Tribune is able to state with authority that the engagement between Howard Gould, the third son of Jay Gould, and Miss Odette Tyler, the well known and popular actress, has been terminated. The initiative was taken by Miss Tyler, and her honorable course has been appreciated by the Gould family. Miss Tyler discovered that objections to the marriage on the part of Howard Gould's brothers and sisters existed to such an extent that the carrying out of the engagement might involve a sacrifice of harmony in the Gould family, and she decided to avoid forcing that alternative upon her lover. The objection which existed to the contemplated marriage had not taken a form which in volved a sacrifice of dignity or self-respect on the part of either of the young persons. While extremely careful to avoid unwarrantable

While extremely careful to avoid unwarrantable interference with his brother's plans, George J. Gould is understood to have believed that the youth of Howard was a bar to his marrying at present. This feeling was shared largely by the friends of the Goulds. A sentiment involving scruples that may be appreciated by persons who have been placed in a similar position existed in the mind of Miss Helen Gould toward her brother's intended bride, owing to the marital experience of Miss Tyler, who secured a divorce from her husband, Edgar P. Crissman, who is now living. As Miss Tyler became aware of the grounds which would interfere with her cordial reception by the Gould family, she formed a determination to give up her engagement and continue her stage career. George J. Gould said to a Tribune reporter yesterday: "I do not care to discuss this subject extensively. My brother Howard informed me that Miss Tyler had broken the engagement, and it appears to be from an exceedingly honorable motive on her part. As I have been informed by Howard, she saw that apparently there was an opposition in the family which might preclude her cordial reception, and not wishing to force herself into the family, she thought it was best to break the encagement. The situation has arisen from the strong feeling or prejudice which my sisters have with tespect to the question of a woman marrying while her divorced husband is still living."

General William H. Kirtland, the father of Miss Tyler, is the assistant superintendent of the lequiry office for missing and dead letters at the Fosther divorced husband is still living."

General William H. Kirland, the father of Miss Tyler, is the assistant superintendent of the inquiry office for missing and dead letters at the Postoffice. He said yesterday: "Miss Tyler, with the entire concurrence of those nearest to her, has broken her engagement with Mr. Gould, having been informed that his londhers and sisters were not disposed to receive her cordially. She will resume her stage duties, and in the summer may carry out her design, long formed, of taking a trip to Europe, where she has both relatives and friends. At present she is out of town."

The statement that Miss Tyler had received, as a baim for her wounded feelings, a large sum of money was characterized as a base lie by General Kirtland. He refused to say where his daughter was staying.

Charles Frohman said yesterday that he had not seen Miss Tyler since the last reheared of "Gudgeons," some ten days ago, and he understood that she had been sick ever since that time. She was so still when he heard from her yesterday. She had not sent him any message about giving up her part in the play, as she doubtless would have done if she had not meant to keep it. 390 346 346 275 126 475

THEIR FEELING TOWARD MISS TYLER. WELL-KNOWN WOMEN TAKE THE CHAR-ACTERS.

HOME TO BE BENEFITED. A large and fashionable audience completely filled the Berkeley Lyceum last evening to witness a series of tableaus, given for the benefit of St. Luke's Home for Indigent Christian Females, under the direction of Walter Satterlee, the artist, and the patronage of a number of well-known women. Plano and violin solos were interspersed with the tableaus, and selections given by the Manna-Hata, Mandolin and Gultar Club, composed of twelve young women.

The first of the eight tableaus given represented a Dutch kitchen; the fireplace, with its quaint man-tel ornaments, tea-table, and the mother and child in the foreground. Miss Emma Heckle, the wellknown soprano, took the part of the mother, and she perfectly realized one's idea of a tiny Dutch mother, as she bent over her child, singing a soft, sweet luliaby. The Italian tableau was an outdoor scene, after Alma-Tadema. Miss Irene Van-tine sweetly sang a cradle song.

Miss Babitta Huss, daughter of the musician and composer, represented the young mother in the Ger-man tableau, who crooned a cradle song over her child, while a young German girl shook the "dreamand tree" and scattered the rose leaves over the and tree" and scattered the rose leaves over the wonder-eyed infant. A recall showed the child trying to grasp the falling leaves with his tiny hands. Miss Huss also posed as the Indian squaw in a realistic tableau, showing a prairie scene, tents, barbaric implements of warfare and the papoose. barbaric implements of warfare and the papoose. The iuliaby was wild and weird. The costumes in this tableau were given Mrs. C. F. The English tableau showed a niche in an ancestral baronial hall, where the sunlight, gleaming through the stained-glass windows, fell over the high-born mother, as sne nushed her child to rest. Mrs. Stanton sang the lullaby behind the scenes, and Miss Woodbury made a stately and beautiful pleture in an elaborate court costume. A pretty ene was enacted by the Swiss mother and little hild, who was being compted to creep to its nother's arms by the sweet strains of Wagner's "Cradle Song." Mrs. J. Brewer Crosby received reli-merited applause for her sweet singing and graceful pose.

In a hammock lazily swung a handsome Spanish manoen, waite a fair companion daintily played a serenace upon his guitar; the musical damsel was represented by Miss Steers. The Russian tableau was elaborate, showing an interior; tea table, samovar, dainty cups, and pensant maid serving tea to the household members. The baby lay in a cradle, the exact reproduction of that of Peter the Great. One of the costumes worn was brought by Miss Isabel Hapsood from the village of Yasmaya Polyana. Count Tolstol's country home, and given by the Countess. The other came from the lower volga region, bought from the woman who planted the flax, spun the thread, wove the cloth, and embroidered it for her Sunday gown. The cradle song in this tableau was sung by Mrs. Crosby.

Among the well-known faces seen in the sudience were those of Bishop Potter, Mrs. Chester Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. H. Le Grand Cannon, Mrs. Blodgett, and her guesta, Mrs. Edward May, of Boston; the Rev. Dr. David H. Greer, Dr. Treat, Mrs. Wilson Cary Biff and W. Garrett Biff, Mrs. Schenck, Mrs. C. H.
